- D. Review and update the benefits management plan and link it to program outcomes.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 3

Which port or ports are used for the FTP data channel in passive mode?

- A. TCP port 20 on the client side
- B. TCP port 21 on the client side
- C. random TCP ports
- D. TCP port 20 on the server side
- E. TCP port 21 on the server side

Answer: C

Explanation:

FTP has a stateful control connection which maintains a current working directory and other flags, and each transfer requires a secondary connection through which the data is transferred. In "passive" mode this secondary connection is from client to server, whereas in the default "active" mode this connection is from server to client. This apparent role reversal when in active mode, and random port numbers for all transfers, is why firewalls and NAT gateways have such a hard time with FTP. HTTP is stateless and multiplexes control and data over a single connection from client to server on well-known port numbers,
