Damaged nerves in the spinal cord do not regenerate themselves naturally, nor even under the spur of nerve-growth stimulants. The reason, recently discovered, is the presence of nerve-growth inhibitors in the spinal cord. Antibodies that deactivate those inhibitors have now been developed. Clearly, then, nerve repair will be a standard medical procedure in the foreseeable future.
Which of the following, if true, casts the most serious doubt on the accuracy of the prediction above?
A. Deactivating the substances inhibiting nerve growth for an extended period would require a steady supply of antibodies.

B. Nerves in the brain are similar to nerves in the spinal cord in their inability to regenerate themselves naturally.
C. Prevention of the regeneration of damaged nerves is merely a by-product of the main function in the human body of the substances inhibiting nerve growth.
D. Certain nerve-growth stimulants have similar chemical structures to those of the antibodies against nerve-growth inhibitors.
E. Researchers have been able to stimulate the growth of nerves not located in the spinal cord by using only nerve-growth stimulants.
