Which statements best describe how architecture principles are used within the Oracle Reference Architecture (ORA)?

- A. Architecture principles provide recommendations (based on industry best practices) that should be followed.
- B. Architecture principles are rules that must be followed in order to comply with the documented architecture.
- C. ORA uses multiple architectural views where each view has its own architecture principles.
- D. ORA documents describe the architectural principles upon which the architecture is based.
- E. The architecture principles for Oracle products are identified whenever an Oracle product incorporated into the architecture.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

The purpose of ORA is to provide a reference architecture for designing, building, and integrating solutions based on modern technology from Oracle and other vendors. The reference architecture offers architecture principles and guidance based on recommendations from Oracle product development architects and field experts.

Information provided by ORA gives architects an understanding of how to design solutions for the Oracle environment and best leverage its capabilities.

Note: Oracle Reference Architecture (ORA) defines a detailed and consistent architecture for developing and integrating solutions based on Oracle technologies. The reference architecture offers architecture principles and guidance based on recommendations from technical experts across Oracle. It covers a broad spectrum of concerns pertaining to technology architecture, including middleware, database, hardware, processes, and services.
